prestigious posts such as vice-president of Council of China Society of Library Science, member of Shanghai Committee of Calligraphy and Seal-engraving, etc. Being fond of learning even as a youth, he learned broadly and tried to memorize things, he is known to be always generous in giving a helping hand to anyone seeking knowledge and advice from him. Though a well-informed expert in bibliology, in bibliography and a calligrapher, he never seeks after wealth or fame, nor vanity. He devotes himself to learning and to library work and he becomes an exemplary person and respected teacher in the learned circle and in the library circle.

The author, the head of Old Books Department in Shanghai Library, based her account first-hand on her thirty years' work or learning together with Mr. Gu. The author thus has done well a meaningful job for readers of this Bulletin. (p.88)
